SYNOPSIS

Plaine Commune works hand in hand with various calls for projects, notably with Les Canaux, an association that supports the development of an engaged, circular, and local economy by training and raising awareness among citizens, businesses, and communities about social and environmental innovation. The association has been commissioned by Paris 2024 to act as the interface with social and solidarity economy (SSE) companies and to help organize the first inclusive and sustainable Games. Here are the profiles of some gems from the Plaine Commune territory who have participated in the Games committed to a social and solidarity economy!

Le Pavé, Marius Hamelot!

Transforming plastic waste commonly found in our bins into an innovative and durable eco-material that can replace concrete or new plastic: this was the challenge taken up by SAS Minimum with its project Le Pavé. A successful bet for this company, which managed to establish its innovation for the construction of the 11,000 seats at the Olympic Aquatic Center and the Arena La Chapelle. Portrait here.

Halage, Nature in the City and Professional Integration at the Athletes' Village

Reintegrating nature into the city by producing trees and flowers locally, bringing life back to polluted land, transforming inert construction site soil into fertile soil... all while training people far from employment in future careers: this is Halage's mission. Its teams have been commissioned to landscape the green spaces of the Olympic and Paralympic Village. More here.

Moulinot, Zero Food Waste Goal!

Transforming food waste into energy or compost while supporting people in difficulty towards sustainable employment: this is the mission of the integration company Moulinot. For the Games, its teams are responsible for collecting, sorting, and recycling waste from the Paris 2024 headquarters and the Arena Paris Nord. More here.
